Websites are no longer online brochures. You can create a website today without a degree in computer science. This means creating simple, yet functional and attractive business websites requires different skills now than it once did. If you are a good writer, can organize information and enjoy using a computer – then a job as a web developer may be a good fit for you. Join us for a conversation with current online marketer Ann Treacy to explore the opportunities and skills necessary to become a web developer. We'll take a peek at tools that make it easier to create web sites and discuss the ups and downs of web developer as a part or full time job.
